

----- GENERAL NEWS -----

Hi All

We had a great time last evening in 't Tejaterke.
Around 60/70 people found their way to this nice small venue.
This was John Kerr's final stage performance sadly.
Which is a great loss because we will not see this great showman and musician perform live anymore!!
But yesterday was great to see him finding the energy to play over 2 hours!!
It was a moving evening with lots of laughter!
Here a small video Rob Enzlin made during the second part.
<https://www.facebook.com/rob.enzlin/videos/10213877667548374/>

I want to thank all who came, Harold and John for the great music,
Bas Broekhuis for the light control and the technicians of 't Tejaterke
In September the new John Kerr will be released.
For those who want a peek of the music listen here!

===== Reviews =====

37757 BySenses - People

their strikes divide the rhythmic reach which pitches between a usual electronic movement and a big jerky up-beat. The synth weaves good areal solos while blowing nice melodious layers which grip onto our eardrums. These melodies return with more swiftness into the furious rhythm of "Finally Falling". Another strong title which is blasted by monstrous percussions.

"Into Space" follows with a structure of rhythm, always clubbed well by violent percussions, which goes adrift with these sequences of which the tones full of juices and of gurglings charm our ears since "Dark Matter". The synth multiplies good solos, abandoning any imprint of melodies in this structure of floating beat. The percussions collide again the movement of the sequencer languishingly circular of "Breaking Through" and its floating and charming solos for the eardrums. Divided between the roundnesses of sequences starved for good cosmic Groove and the bombardment of the percussions, the rhythm evolves with its fluids variations while remaining constantly lively in its cosmic envelope. An envelope fed by lines of celestial voices which add a not too intrusive seraphic flavor, leaving an imprint charming to this approach very Jean-Michel Jarre, in particular at the level of harmonies in the synth solos. The title-track throws us in a very extraterrestrial universe with an effect of gigantic loops decorated with sound effects from another world. Certainly, the flavors of cosmic rock in the best years of Jarre can be found here and they soften a little this a bit unusual introduction. The step of the sequencer resounds piercingly. Destabilizing the opening of "Zero Gravity", it calls the percussions for help in order to forge another ear-catchy cosmic rhythm as heavy than as slow. This rotary and spasmodic movement of the sequencer is of use as bases to very good cosmic solos on a structure which evolves with a form of contracted velocity in its second half. The undulatory and parallel movements of the sequencer which feeds the opening "Beyond Time" are sprayed by an excessive heaviness fed by another load of the percussions and by very round sequences which dab an ostinato coated with sound effects which incite to the stridency. In this overloaded sound noise, Jesper Sorensen managed to keep a harmonious control with other good catchy solos. Phew ... my ears are thirsty of peace after 65 minutes of rhythmic storm. But there is more! Two bonus tracks come with the download of "Zero Gravity". "Dark Matter Breaking Through" are both tracks in one, which is very logical, whereas "Ascending (Short Edition)" says it all. But there is even more when you buy this title on the site Bandcamp de Jesper Sorensen. The latter has edited 2 long titles which melt all the music here in two long parts without intermissions between them. An excellent initiative which gives to those who buy this album more for their money. But whatever, this album, without bonuses, is an inescapable for those who like a heavy and very lively electronic cosmic rock. My ears ate it with delight from beginning to end!
