

-----GENERALNEWS-----

Hi All

Ron is in bed with a leg infection so a short E-News by me.

The new Book by Mark Jenkins:

"Klaus Schulze; 50 Years - The Ultimate Critical Discography" will have a bit lower price then first announces and it is now in production and could arrive hopefully the end of this week, early the week after but we will know more after the shipping date to us. I heard from Ron he is really looking forward to this as he is a big Schulze fan.

"50 Years" covers every single piece of music ever released by Klaus Schulze. As well as analysis and interviews, there are huge numbers of photos, many never before seen, and detailed explanations of instrumentation, and how Schulze created the sounds for each of his ground breaking albums. Looks even infesting to me :-)

"Klaus Schulze; 50 Years" will be printed only in a single run of 200, and these are expected to sell out very quickly.

Thanks for your time.

26475 Rich, Robert - What we left Behind

16 months after "Filaments", a spectacular odyssey through fascinating space expanses, one of the undisputable ambient innovators returns with another jewel. On "What We Left Behind" CD, as displayed by its title, Robert Rich transforms his dreams about the Mother Earth when the humankind is gone, with a crow as a spirit guide, into an exquisitely sophisticated soundsculptures, showcasing his continuous musical virtuosity. Out since May 2016 on Robert's Soundscape Productions, the CD comes, as usual, in a really gorgeous 6-panel digipak masterly designed by a frequent collaborator John Bergin exhibiting stunning cover art by Ibizan painter Romanie Sanchez, who has already contributed her amazing art to two collaborative releases by Alio Die & Paralled Worlds "Circo Divino" and "Elusive Metaphor". So with such visual power it's quite obvious the first big points are awarded already, but this is nothing new when it goes to Robert Rich's CDs. No wadays, when many physical items are released in reduced quality, we must be really grateful for such consistent artful bliss. Bravo, Romanie, John & Robert!!!

"Profligate Earth" unfolds with authentic trademarking insignias, it simply can't be anyone else but Robert Rich! Filigree organic sounds masterfully amalgamate with nebulous blankets and intangibly subtle rhythm motifs, while guarded by abstractions of Chari Chuang's voice (remember Chari Chuang's virtuosic performance on "Medicine Box"?). A very pleasant intro with top-notch sound quality again delivered! Signature flute work returns (after absence on "Filaments" album) and announces "Raku" and commingles with gentle primordial rumblings, gossamer tribal patterns and captivating biotic quietudes. Richly enigmatic composition! "Voice Of Rust" keeps on its primal path, when merging yearning flute with languishingly rumbling artifacts. "Soft Rains Fall" excels with tremendous lap steel guitar artistry, when melting earmarking ethereal choir nuances with balmy beats, while soothing atmospheric blankets are riding atop. This is Robert Rich at the very top of his immersing soundmagic!!! Shorter "Rhizome" dwells in perplexingly primordial terrains. "Transpiration" is awakened by weirdly enrapturing sound fragments of child-like voice, but soon the center stage is stolen by utterly evocative flute, a truly genuine hallmark, which is meticulously bridged with monochromatic drone, phantasmal helixes and magnetizing tribal drumming. Over 5 minutes of pure aural ecstasy awaits here, a Hall of Fame track!!! The next composition, "Corvid Collections", melts mysterious flute motifs, subterranean drum patterns and contemplative tinkles. "Aerial On Warm Seas", with 9:08 the longest piece on the album, is driven by magnificently melancholic lap steel cries, which later metamorphose into powerfully intense, nearly transcendental stratum and then evanescing through bizarrely colored phantasmagoric sceneries back to weeping loneliness. This is a fully rewarding venture into unmistakable sonic domains demonstrating uniquely distinctive artistry of its sole protagonist. Hats off to you, Robert!!! "Never Hunger" reveals with deep drumming, longing flute and grieving lap steel guitar. Credited on last two tracks is Robert's Californian kindred spirit Forrest Fang for used abstractions of his performance on cümbüs (a Turkish stringed instrument). "After Us" dives into unfathomable depths with its static drone, distant hums and diaphanously rustling embellishments. 6-minute title track "What We Left Behind" incorporates pulsing laid-back rhythms coupled with calmly sweeping expansive washes and strikingly poignant lap steel vistas. Beauty!!! "Meeting Face To Face" starts serenely with slightly exotic fragranced strings, which conjugate with panoptic angelic lap steel choirs and warmly cinematic horizons. A truly gorgeous conclusion!

Robert Rich is known for his perfection and consistency and "What We Left Behind" is a perfect example of his superiorly creative musicianship. A quite colorful 62-minute recording, which showcases all essential insignias of this Californian. They are fully blossoming and wealthily infused by 3 and a half decades of his stellar recording career. Thank you, Maestro!!! "What We Left Behind" is another true piece of art by Robert Rich, which will delight your eyes and ears!!! And by the way, since yesterday the newest CD by Robert Rich entitled "Vestiges" is available for order. A new album after 7 months? Wow, that's a quite unusual for this sonic explorer. I can't wait!!!

64544 Zanov - Chaos Islands

One of the big challenges of visionary musicians is to tame ears accustomed to another sound, to another conception of musical structures. This was the case for Synergy, Vangelis and closer to the Berlin School, Keller & Schonwalder. And if we talk about contemporary artists in the field of EM without borders or territories, we must add the name of Zanov right next to Kurtz Mindfields. We see that the French musician is in very good company. And for good reason, CHAOS ISLANDS is an album of indescribable sound richness with 7 chapters, with an average duration of 7 minutes, where the music changes forms taking care to attach the mobile phases so that chaos, when there is, becomes harmony. Inspired by the mathematical drama of Theory of Chaos, this latest album by Pierre Zalkazanov introduces us to his world by offering us the delights of his latest gem; the Arturia's MatrixBrute synthesizer.

It's by mixing a philharmonic structure with waves of futuristic sounds that the introduction in morphic waltz mode of Edge of Chaos Island leads the listener into his first false perception. As soon as a jumping key appears after 60 seconds, this first title of CHAOS ISLANDS crosses the corridors of tumult and tranquility to stumble in an excellent electronic rock from the future. Effects of jerks shake the proposed phases, a bit like in the opening of World's Away from Strange Advance, while organic sequences and percussions cling to the strata of violins which have already reshaped the rhythm in a lunar ballad where chaos gets free from any constraint in a final that we have not heard pass. From its 7 minutes and dust, Edge of Chaos Island is of an instability to make our sense of hearing work fiercely. If it's a title that commands more than a first listen, Inception Island asks for a little more! The impression of being on a treadmill that slides through a glass tunnel giving visual access to a multitrack sound fauna is the best way I have to describe this fascinating funeral march where the souls of those who have left us are woven into musical sails and walls. These asymmetrical patterns are return and parade with these panoramic shakes felt in Edge of Chaos Island. The opening of Strange Attractor Island captured my interest from its first notes. I like this spheroidal structure which maintains the rhythm in its minimalist and catchy status, while the synths organize the different visions of a three-headed melody which brings us back to the first steps of French cosmic music. It's very good, even if sometimes the rhythmic indiscipline of Zanov disturbs its charm. But you have to live with it!

The example is the nice opening in nostalgia of Three Body Island. The chords are deep and resonate in symbiosis with a sad opera voice masked by the reverberating effects of the chords and of a circular curtain where prisms sparkle. A delicious undulating rhythm spreads a false impression of an accordionist who is lost in corridors where the sounds are reflected on mirrors in order to form a melodious entity. It's like a run in the wrong direction in a labyrinth where the beginning is lost in inexplicable hollow winds. It's in a racing effect of gasps and puny tremors that takes place the first moments of Phase Space Island. Structured on two phases which don't understand each other, the rhythm and its ambiances embrace the recto-verso of its antagonist in a structure of rhythm too quick for these same elements of ambiances. The quivering/shivering style of atmospheric layers makes a thick coat of strobe jerks on rhythm whose strange spheroidal shape dissolves it in a structure that crumbles after the passage of a note. I can well imagine this borderless down-tempo being part of dance music in the next Star Wars trilogies. And after several trial and error, the longest title of CHAOS ISLANDS melts at the same time as my problem of inattention resurfaces! Instability Island brings me back to what is the most beautiful in this last album by Zanov, that is to say two contrary entities which forge a pleasant melody in the tumult of the synths of the French musician. These elements which cross the horizons out maintain the level of listening on the alert, while under these rhythmic instabilities of atmospheric matters a beautiful melody gets created which attaches to arpeggios parading in short pyrographic phases. Would you be surprised if I mention that the finale sniffs the possibility of a transfer for an electronic rock? It's in a kind of Rumba, with jerky sound dimensions, that Emergence Island ends an enchanting album in terms of sounds and intriguing in terms of rhythm versus ambiances and melodies. It's in a spotless production that CHAOS ISLANDS reveals its universe as special as the musical research and artistic visions of its songwriter and performer-synthesist. In a music that succeeds in weaving its links between complexity and simplicity, Zanov brings us to this point of convergence where chaos finds balance in this indefinable beauty that is the nature of music ... in all its forms.

gr-280 Free System Projekt - British Aisles Volume Two

This is the second part of this long-awaited show by audiophiles and fans of retro analog Berlin School that Marcel Engels and Ruud Heij gave in the sanctuary of the Baptist Church of Saint John in Leicester in May 2008. And like in British Aisles Vol.1, Free System Project offers another daring 63-minute track released from the tormented ambiances of the Berlin School from the Tangerine Dream's years 73-77. We warm up the synths by extracting a cloud of vintage sound effects for the first 6 minutes before a wave of Mellotron disperses its enchanting rug which hosts a nice fluty chant from the Mellotron. The Dutch duo doesn't lose any time on this opening by throwing it in the mouth of the sequencer around the 13 minutes. The movement does very Phaedra with electronic effects on an oscillating rhythm which undulates strongly. We feel the weight of the jumping keys which disperse this coating of mist while another line, heavier, accentuates the rhythmic measure of British Aisles. Everything has been written about these movements, knotted with explosive kicks, which delighted aficionados of the Berlin School and of the concert performances by Peter Baumann, Chris Franke and Edgar Froese as this Berlin trio burned our imaginative cells in the heart of the 70's. The synth solos fly with fluidity, intelligently mixing the airs of the flute and the inspirations of an electric guitar. This monstrous structure stretches its cadence to the limit of 30 minutes, plunging the atmospheres into an exploratory void from which an organic reverberation line is uprooted. It goes up and down, accompanying a nasal song with its Arabic scents. A discreet choir of the disciples of Hades joins this slow amphibian rhythmic framework which in turn dies out in a nest of dark winds and their reverberations, preparing the 3rd rhythmic phase, the most violent one, which explodes around 47 minutes. This phase, which is very Redshift, leads British Aisles to a final and its bed for organ songs in the last three minutes of this long title which thwarts any filling traps. A very good title!

And if we don't have enough of these undulating rhythms of the Berlin School style, Altered States offers 2 adjacent rhythmic lines, one flowing and the other more jerky, which make harmonic kicks in the bed of an invasive Mellotron and other analog sound effects. Spectral voices get graft onto this electronic ballet, as well as solos ferreting like specters in this 11 minutes filled with nostalgic nobility by a Free System Project which was at the top of the Berlin School reinvented in its model of pure improvisation.

In the end, it's another great initiative from Ron Boots to put this concert on a manufactured CD. The remix made by Ruud Heij perfectly cuts out the roles of the sequencers during this show of which the only lengths are the distance between the release of the two volumes. Fans of vintage Berlin School, Tangerine Dream of the Baumann years and all these groups, I think of Redshift and Arc; BRITISH AILES Vol.2 is for you ... Don't forget British Aisles Vol.1 ??
